Telenews Theatre

Latest newsreels on the new program at the Telenews this week, picture the war on three fronts, France, Saipan and Elba.

From the Pacific come the first pictures of the landing and bitter fighting as U. S. Marine and Army troops land on the Jap island of Saipan in the Marianas. American forces pour on shore and wipe out enemy positions. Airfields are captured, planes on the ground are smashed, equipment destroyed as U. S. might moves closer to Japan.

French troops and British Commandos capture the Nazi-held island of Elba, where once Napoleon lived in exile. Landings are made in water neck high and against a prepared and determined enemy. Within two days, Allied forces drive the Nazis out of Elba.

The Robot Plane, Hitler's long-threatened secret weapon is shown for the first time in amazing pictures as it wings its way over England. Anti-aircraft gunners fire at one of these self-propelled, catapult-launched bombs. A hit explodes the robot in mid-air.

One sad day, one of the fox terriers became ill and despite his mistress' tender care, his little puppy life came to an end. The body was placed in a wooden box and with great ceremony on the part of the loving owners, buried nearby. This lone little terrier watched this sorrowful procedure and became disconsolate.

When doughnut time came round that afternoon, his mistress gave him a doughnut as usual. He took this in his mouth, placed it on the ground, looked at it thoughtfully, and then carried it slowly to the newly-covered grave. He proceeded to paw the ground until he came upon the wooden box. Then he placed the doughnut on the box, scraped the soil over it and walked quietly away.

THE BATTLE FOR THE BALKANS
A ROUND TABLE

Louis Adamic—Louis Dolivet—Josef Hanc—Sava N. Kosanovich—Bogdan Raditsa—Gaetano Salvemini—Victor Sharenkoff—Rustem Vambery—Basil Vlavianos
J. Alvarez Del Vayo

(Continuation)

Salvemini — You asked a good question, Mr. Adamic, and I'll answer it in the same direct way that you ask it. There is no doubt that within the limits of human possibility there is a moral duty to make reparation for the damage done to those unfortunate people — not by the Italian people but by the fascist gangsters—

Adamic — Who happen to be Italians.

Salvemini — If Yugoslav Fascists had happened to act in Italy they would have acted in the same way. But the fact is that the havoc has been wrought by Italian Fascists, and within the limits of human possibilities reparations should be made for the evil done. What reparations? Italy has no gold and cannot pay in gold. If you want paper money you will be given as much as you want. The only freedom of the press in fascist Italy was the printing of paper currency. Yet, first of all, moral reparation is available. The King of Italy, Mussolini, all his ministers and all the highest military and civil officials who acted as agents of the fascist government in Slovenia, Dalmatia and Greece must be handed over to you. You can deal with them according to your own judgment.

Salvemini — Then something could be done even from the material point of view. If Italy has no gold, no coal, no iron, no timber, she has labor. Other countries could supply raw materials and Italy could use her labor to build ships, to be handed over to Greece and Yugoslavia as a token of good will. Starting with the properties of the King and Siano, the properties of those responsible for the havoc in Greece and Yugoslavia should be confiscated. From the proceeds the Italian Government would pay for raw materials and labor. When the proceeds from this confiscation were exhausted, reparations would come to an end. Let the responsible people pay—and not the Italian people as a whole. All decent men and women in Italy are ashamed of what has happened in Greece and Yugoslavia. I am sure they would agree to such a plan or something of the same kind.

Hanc — What do you think about using Italian labor for building roads?

Salvemini — Everywhere there are workers capable of building roads. You'd have unemployment among your workers.

Adamic — I'd say that that is all right.

Dolivet — There should be a common effort and a common fund. But we don't want to begin again on the basis of pure reparations because if we do we'll provoke another war.

Hanc — The Russian Government made the same proposal in 1917. They wanted Belgium reconstructed by means of an international fund to which every country on both sides of the table would contribute.

Salvemini — At that time there was only the problem of Belgium. Today the whole of Europe is involved. I am afraid we must give up the idea of "pooling all resources." When the war is over, America alone will still have resources to pool — although America also will be impoverished. "Pooling of all resources" means asking America to place her remaining resources at the service of Europe. I foresee that when the war is over the people of the United States will refuse to sink more billions of dollars in European relief. Each country will have to heal its own wounds, accepting for years and years a lower standard of living. Let everyone face this terrible prospect with fortitude.
