It will be for the first time that such a conference will be held by the members themselves and have a final voice in the final decisions that are passed upon by the conference of delegates from states of Ohio, Pennsylvania, Illinois and Minnesota. It is more interesting to know that the conference members will be the youth of the S. S. C. That the conference will add something new there is little room to doubt. The nature of the preparations precludes the thought of failure.

The additional point of interest is that the Supreme Board of the S. S. C. It is a sign that there is enough interest in the youth to trust them in making their own decisions. 3. The March Revolution. The whole of the Austrian Empire was suddenly thrilled by the same spark of revolution which in France overthrew the king Louis Phillippe and there was the same cry and lunge forward to freedom from autocracy. On March 13. 1848, Metternich had to make a hasty leave from Vienna and with him went-Sedlinisky and all the other supporters of an autocracy. In a few days that followed Emperor Ferdinand cancelled all the strict orders concerning censorship and other things that were impossible to hold unless it was with an iron hand. The letter that announced the new order and the new scheme of government was published April 25th, 1848 which in theory at least granted all the nations in Austria perfect equality and the famous Paragraph 4 read: To every nation there is given the guarantee that the purity of his language and his nationality will not be interfered with in any manner. Besides this there were the promises that the tithes and serfdom were to be done away in an official manner. The March revolution with the flight of Metternich and his followers and the subsequent edict made public by the emperor really spelled the end of the middle ages for the Austrian lands. All those things which characterized the Middle Ages from the modern were swept aside and the peasant upon whom the burden lay heaviest breathed a sigh of relief and the air of freedom which he only dared dream of. The Slovene in his bustle and his hurry under the old regime felt that he could accomplish things that were impossible before. It is true that the Slovene did not achieve his end of establishing a "United Slovenia" as he had hoped but with the recognition of the various lingual groups in the Empire the Slovene saw that his language was a little more respected and that the people who were Slovenes in name began to take interest and pride in the language. Slovene was used more and more as an official language and it was introduced into the schools. The "mother tongue" was officially ordered as the only language of the school room. True the mother tongue was taught very little in the schools before the edict was recalled but it must be said that it was introduced into the higher schools soon after first at the college at Ljubljana and then at the college at Gradec. Even the commercial offices used the Slovene as an official language at least in dealings with the Slovenes if they did not make exclusive use of it. An era of social life began. The dramatic and the singing societies with their performances awoke a national consciousness. After the short spell of the "awakening of nations" came the reaction. The new Emperor Franc Joseph I. after his victory over the Hungarians and successful war against the Italians denied practically all the terms that were offered before. Bach's regime of absolutism was again in power. Nevertheless the year 1848 did not go past the Slovene without doing some good. During the time of renewed absolutism the interior organization of the Slovene progressed rapidly. The peasant began to realize that he was free from all those things which prohibited ambitions began to be conscious of his Slovene birthright and the youth which was silently growing was also preparing to take an active hand in the future events that were to take place. Youth's time was at hand in 1860 after the defeat of the Italian and the French troops in Italy and the republication of the freedom edict of 1848. Freedom of the press in 1848 was the beginning of a new literary era and an era of real literary production. A whole series of newspapers besides Bleiweis' "Novice". The most important was the "Slovenija" which existed two years 1848-1850. When it ceased publications the "Ljubljanski časnik" kept up the Slovenija's traditions for another year. The Ljubljanski časnik was forced to suspend publication with the recall of the new .constitution. The year 1848 also brought the first youth's magazine "Vedez", and "For the education of the people" there was "Pravi Slovenec". For church purposes the "Slovenski cerkveni list" was published but after a few short editions the name was changed to "Zgodnja Danica". In the other provinces the newspaper activity was just as noticeable. In Celj, Trieste, Celovec began to publish Slovene newspapers. Celovec had also the additional printing institution of the Mohorjeva Družba which was instituted at the recommendation of Bishop Slomsek. In Vienna the "Občni državni zakonik" was published while in Slovenia Korosh, Stajer and the coastal provinces each had its own "zakonik".

At that time the first literary journals made their appearance. Papers which were intended for literary purposes alone. Thus the "Slovenska Čbela" was published in Celj for three months. When it ceased operations there immediately followed "Slov. čbela" in Celovec, where Anton Janezic began his fruitful work. Even this died in the middle of 1853 because of the lack of interest of the Slovenes especially in Carniola. To this must be added the strong competition of the Bleiweis "Novice". Janezic's "Glasnik slovenskega slovstva" saw only one issue. But all these seeming failures were not such in the end. They served as harbingers of a real need and that was answered when the youth grew up and began to support the "Slovenski Glasnik" which began in 1858. - The movement of 1848 had the concrete literary result that there was at last a realization of lingual unity which was a sad lack in the Slovene language. The Slovene was introduced into the schools and offices, the number of newspapers increased manifold each with its own provincionalisms and its own dialect. This was the plainest proof that the question of lingual unity was imperative and though the publications lived for only a short time it was evident that the Slovenes became conscious that with literary conditions as they were productive work could not be curried on. The way to lingual unity was shown by the Ilyrian Movement, which was strongly supported by the Korosh, Matija Majar-Ziljski. His final aim was to join the Slovenes, the Croatians and the Serbs in one language in such a manner that the language that would result would resemble a single language composed of the Slevene and the Serbo-Croat and fashioned in such a way that it would compare favorably to the remaining Slav languages. Hurnble as the idea was it received gallant support from Andrej Einspieler, Radoslav Raz-lag, the youthful Janezic, Luka Svetec. But becal of no definite program many forgot about the idea shortly afterwards. As useless as the idea a whole may have been nevertheless the Majar rule adopted by all. Majar's rule was: only such forms be used which are all-Slovene or at least known of greater part of the people, for those forms are ch to the Ilyrian language. On the basis of this rule pled with the study of the old Slovene forms Luka tec with the aid of the younger writers introduc whole line of new forms from the Stajer-Korosn lects. The youth of that time accepted these forms used them in the publication of their papers G nija, Vedež, Slovenska Bčela) while Mataj Cigale them exclusively in the Vienna "kanonik". In the objections of the elders especially the Novice and the Zgodnja Danica the gover through its educational department ordered the forms to be used exclusively in the schools.

4. The Pioneers in a new era.

The Year 1848 awakened in the first case put a national enthusiastic nature and lovers of ite and a peculiar form of political lyricism. Bu younger forced extended their field of ender newer fields. While the work up to 1848 was i lyrical the youth began their hand with Narrah terature, the novel and the epic. Characterist? times was the introduction of literary criticiam.

In closest contact with the revolutionary ment was Lovro Toman native of K/.mnegorice that time lawyer at Vienna. Later as advoca practiced at Radovljica and Ljubljana when made consul. He was one of the charter member "Matice Slovenske". He died at Rodaun in 187 works which were published under the title "Gi morodni" (1849) sings of liberty, love of home a of God in pathetic and sometimes in anach forms. His language depends very much on that seski, the first political lyricist. The poet's love sipine Urbancic whom he married in 1853 100 pression in his "Milotnikah". His wife Josephin bancic-Turnogradska also entered her name in literary roll with simple songs and simple stories was she who first uses the motive of Veronika niska in her story "Nedolžnost in pravica".
