While the Zvon was being published Stritar was a jutor in Vienna and assistant editor of the official law paper n Vienna. In 1873 Stritar was married and immediately began to take his examinations in law. In August 1875 he became professor at the Piarist Gymnasium in the VII Vienna school district.

Slovenes the famous work of Goldsmith, "Vicar of Wakefield." Though the traces of the model are very evident even to the dialogue there is much that is original so much so that it can be classified as Stritar's original work. The life of the Vicar as dipicted is Stritar's own idea of ideal life as well as the scenes from peasant life are his own. In the novel "Rosana" he received his inspiration for the heroine from Goethe's "Wilhelm Meister Lehrjahre" and Thomas' opera "Mignon." Rosana is a girl, who is kidnapped from her parents and later rescued from a traveling troup of actors by her father though he does not know her. In his last and most original novel "Sodnikovi" he utilizes Rousseau's idea of the evil of culture. In dipicting

(Luck). "Preseren in Poezija" (Preseren and Poetry) are expressions of the first: "Dunajske elegije" (Vienna elegies) "Presirnova oporoka" (Preseren's Will) as examples of love of humanity while love of suffering people is expressed beautiful in poems such as "Delavcu" (The laborer) "Prava sirota" (The Orphan), Hromenu otroku" (To the crippled Child) etc. Poetically he called upon the Slovenes to be free and was enthusiastically happy of the freeing of the Turkish danger but his hopes of freedom was spoiled when Austria occupied the territory of Bosnia and Hercegovina. This disappoint was expressed in the poem "V Bosno". Poems for children even at this time show Stritar's pedagogical tendencies which became a characteristic is ideally realized in the "Mladi vojaki" a poem of the "Pod lipo" collection, and in the stories in the Zimski veceri and Jagode. Stritar sings his farewell to literature in the Lesniki which appeared on his 70th anniversary. In the last collection he writes of his friend Levstik thus: "before his (Levstik's) hand began to tremble from age and weakness he laid his pen aside as a sensabile writer. I do likewise." In 1901 he resigned from his position in the University and lived in Vienna. In 1923 he was invited to live in Slovenija which he accepted. He lived in Rogaski Slatini but unfortunately he died on the 25th of November 1923. He was buried in Ljubljana.

With the backing of his position and with no fear, of financial losses Stritar began his literary work. With the new year of 1876 the Zvon made its new appearance this time it continued until 1880. In the meantime a new literary paper was founded in Marabor. It was "Zora" edited by David Trstenjak, and later by Prof. Janko Pajk. As soon as "Zvon" appeared again it immediately assumed its leadership. Gathered in its roll of contributors was the best Slovene literary talent. Among the older literary men was Fran Erjavec while the ranks of the younger men was filled with Josip Jurcic, Ivan Tavcar, Simon Gregorcic, Fran Levec. The real character of the paper is given by the contributions of the editor himself who also contributed to most of the reading matter.

Characteristically the dialogues do not form a vital part of the matter as they did before, however, the scope of the work has increased. Besides showing an interest in literature and art Stritar wrote extensively of other cultural affairs; Love of country, the universal call of the Slavs to show their brotherely love and his own ideal of setting universal, example for all the other nations and nationalities. Of like nature are Stritar's criticism, essays, comic dialogues, as well as his memoirs.

With the "Gospod Mirodolski" Stritar gave the peasant life he comes close to Jurcic's realism but there are traces of his own idealism.

"An Old Bachelor's Christmas Eve," "The Man with the Cat", "Forgive" are Stritar's best short stories of city life. He also included some educational stories for children among which the most known is "Hudi stric" (The Strict Uncle) and a satire "Deveta dežela" (The country beyond the seven leagues).

His many dramatic contributions to Slovene literature are of a didactic nature comprising scenes from the social life of townfolk and country people with a stress upon educational subjects. Some of the better known one's include Klara, Najemnina (Wages), Zapravljivec (Sqanderer). The war in the Balkans was his inspiration for the dramatic episodes, Kosana, Iz Bosna (From Bosnia), Očetovo p'smo (The Father's letter). The most original and adjudged as his best drama is Zorko a lively and interesting picture of student life.

In this period of Stritar's life his poetry becomes very definitely impregnated with real poetic feeling. In the form of a sonnet wreath he expresses his thoughts of "world-sorrow." He went further and in some poems dedicated to Preseren he taught the Slovenes love of home things and a love of humanity and a sympathetic love of those who are suffering. All of these feelings were expressed poetically in "Sreca" of his later years.

LATER YEARS

In 1881 the Ljubljanski Zvon began to appear in which realism was the tone of the writings which freed itself from Stritar's idealism. The editors did not even invite Stritar to contribute in the beginning. | They called upon him much later but then it was too late-Stritar was past his prime.

Among the "dialogues" which he contributed in 1885 those in which he discusses naturalism are the most important. Among the poems the best is "Nazaj" (Return.)

During the years 1887 and 1888 he brought a kind of conclusion to his work with the publication of his "Collected works" in six volumes. This set was completed in 1899 with the seventh in the series which included his later writings.

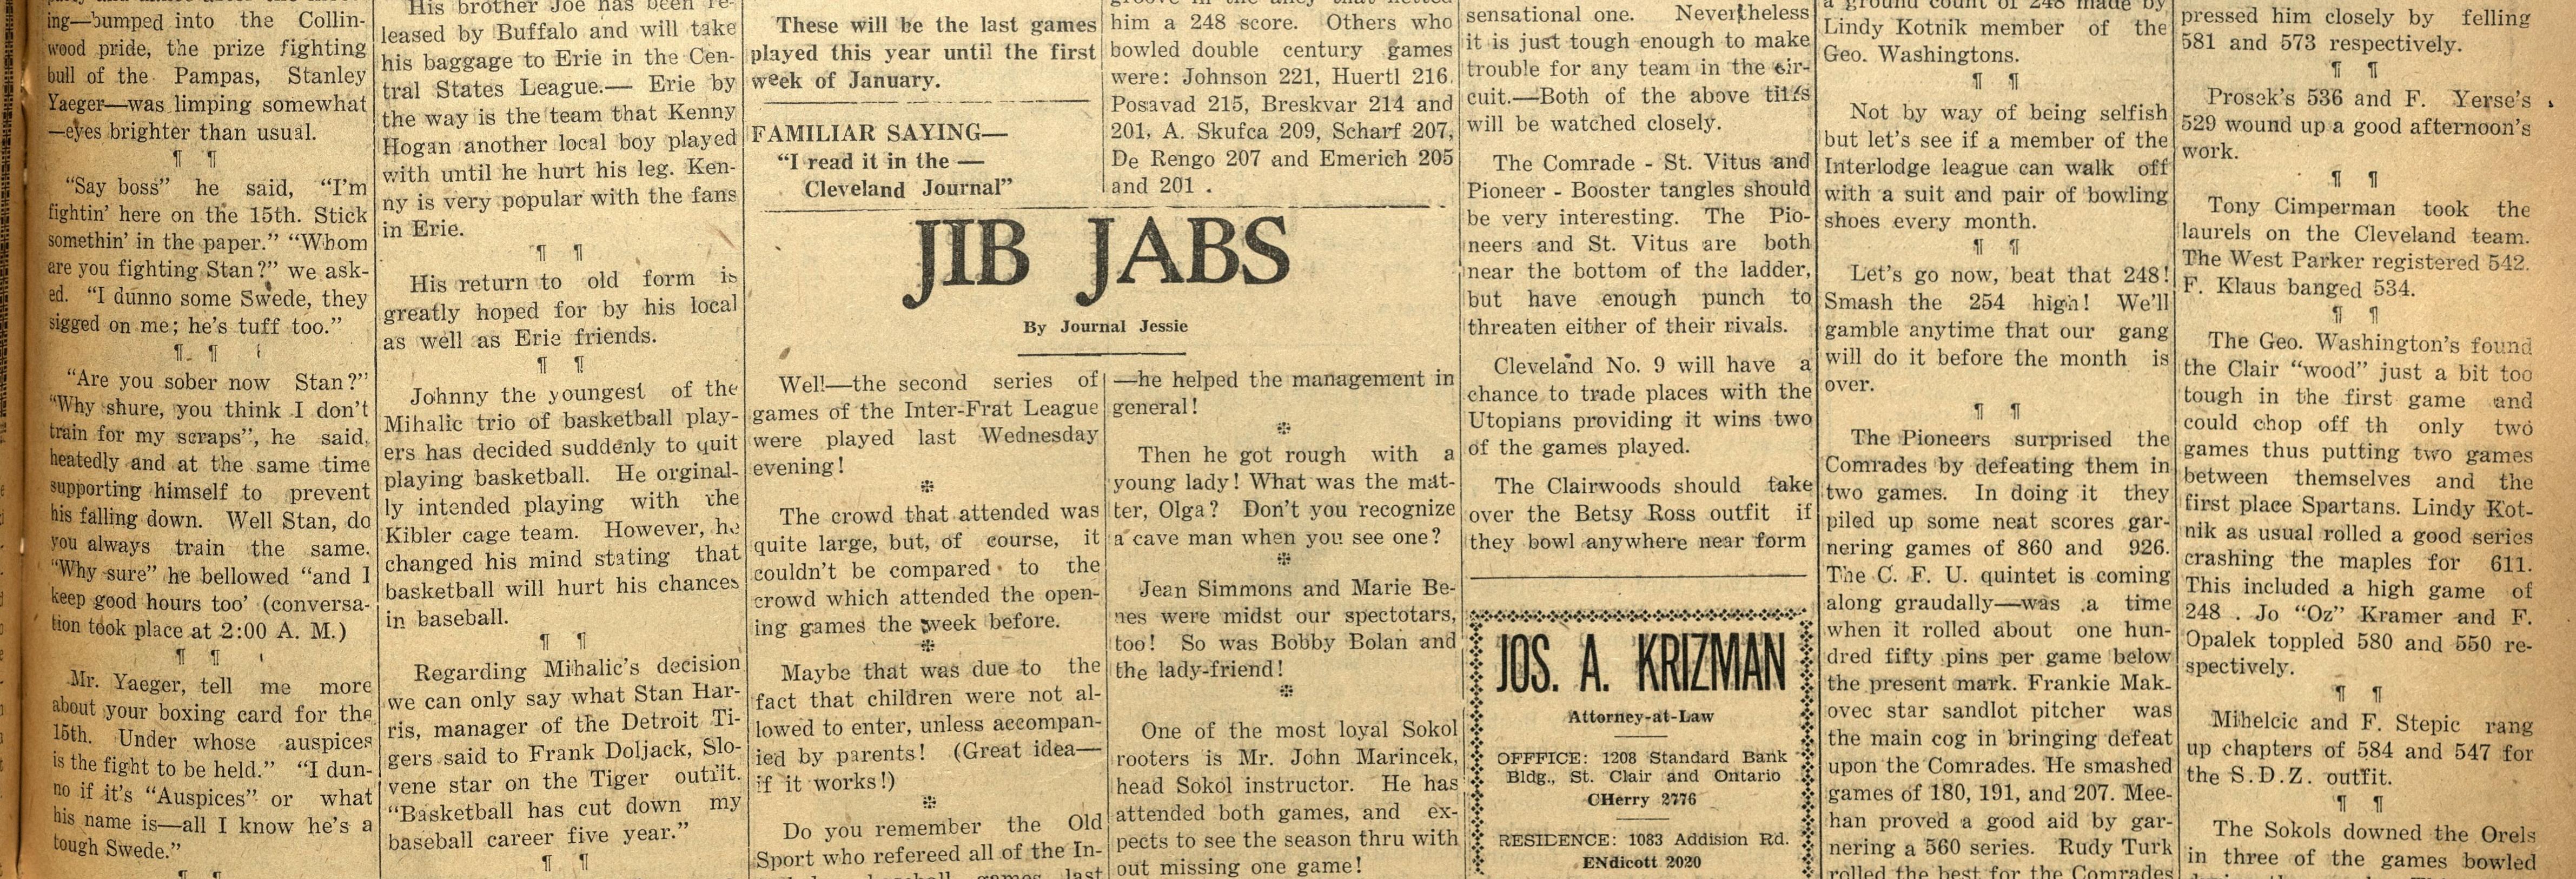

When the newest influences in literature gained headway in the Ljubljanski Zvon Stritar realized conclusive that he was a past number. He therefore, dedicated his efforts to the education of youth through literature. In the course of four years he published in the publications of the Mohorjeva Druzba a collection of four books; Pod lipo (Under the Linden) 1895, "Jagode" (Berries) 1899, "Zimski veceri" (Winter nights) 1899, "Lešniki" (Walnuts) 1902. The youthful strain Stritar was always interested in the develop of Slovene literature. His interest was of epochal importance for Slovene literature. He secured the liberty of criticism which in the Slovene literature meant improvement and development. He was the first to develop a foundation for literary criticism; he introduced the psychological novel after the example set by the other literary men of Europe. In general he lifted the Slovene literature upon a new plane of finish which was not there before he entered the field. With m dialogues he made the languae very flexable and very usable especially in business and ordinary conversa tion. In short Stritar was the educator of the your ful age of writers and an educated youth; with poetry he created an atmosphere and surrounde with a dignity that made people realize that a poet be such must devote all of his energies to develop His baised view of "world-sorrow" and an enfo idealism tho they did influence in the beginning forgotten by the succeeding generation.
