With the novel, Slovene lyricism also underweit change. Under the influence of the Decadence Symbolism lyricists began to strive for a new mo expression. The motives of the poets and the nov was identical. They wished to recreate and rem poetic form, to break down the old and untirm and rules; in short they wanted to talk their own uage, write their own laws, critics, aesthetics, and to say without regard for morals (Pregelj). Ho the solid and yet unspoiled nature of the Slovene lo so deeply rooted in Slovene character saved the Slove younger generation from the most serious wayward which was clearly evident among the decadent poor other countries. Ivan Cankar was the most interpid enthusias the new poetry and as early as 1897 in a criticion Gangl's poems closed the case against epigonian c sm together with its teacher Cimperman who with bad rhyme and poor thought was sapping all from the poetic works. His criticism is notework cause in it he foretold of the modern trend of D poetry in the words: Modern lyricism is before the and when it raps loudly enough, it (the door) whith of its own accord. With these words he was thinking not only of self but also of his friends Oton Zupancic and tin Kette as well as Josip Murn Alexandrov with just joined their ranks. They were joined toget much the same way as the contributors to the forty years before. Oton Zupancic, Dragotin Kelle Josip Murn Alexandrov were members of a co literary club in L'ubljana which was dissolved w most active members of the Gymnasium left school the concluding year book "Na razstanku" publisi 1898.

brothers and sons which he represented in Francka (Character in Na klancu), Hanica (in Kriz na gori) and the most beautiful picture of women, his mother Short History of Slo-(in Moje zivljenje). Women he also pictures as the victims of selfishness and immorality. In sharp convene Literature trast to the realistic picture of the conditions as he By F. T. this intense love more than the idea of satire which by and by dominated his writings and was the inspiration for his artistic creations. The first intimation of this love can be found in his works which were published about the year 1902. After his return to his own country when themes of home and his youth began to predominate he devoted his talents to this love and. whole lists of works such as: "Za krizem (Behind the Cross), 1909: "Troje povesti (Three Stories) 1911: and novelettes which were published in the various newspapers in 1914 and 1915, especially his last and probably his greatest work 'Podobe iz sanj" (Visions From Dreams) (1917), which he wrote "in the years of terror, 1914-1917 as a reflection of these terrible days for a remembrance." Cankar's art is thoroughly individualistic "Everywhere he pictures life as he himself saw it; he interprets as he himself understood it: many of the obseivations of life are wrong and many things in his books are not plainly good and oftentimes his judgment is biased and his generalizations are wrong. Nevertheless everything is a true picture of that which he thought and a still truer picture of that which he felt and suffered" (Pregelj). Cankar completely remade the Slovene novel in the matter of motives and created many things which are extremely new and beautiful. In conjunction with Mesko he created a new style in telling the novel, enriched the Slovene language with many new phrases, pictures and similies, he discovered the musical quality of the Slovene language as not one before him has done. Cankar is the classiest of modern romantic symbolism for which he obtained a good hearing not only among the Slovenes but in Europe in general.

The inclination to satire was deepened in Cankar's later years. In cne of his novels he wrote, "In the mirror of my soul, deformed with sorrow and sadness I saw the world with all of its greatness and fault with its fearful and wondrous outlook; to my eyes opened to the ways of the world, a life enfolded itself with all of its exaggerated comedy." It was to that world that Cankar declared war and bitter fight to the finish. That was the battle of hypocricy and life without character that he flailed inmercifully in his novels and dramas from "Tujci" (Aliens) and "Gospa Judita (Madam Judith) to "Krpanova kobila (Krpan's Mare) and "Hlapec Jernej" (Farmhand Jernej). To make a climax to all of his work he wrote of all the faults of the world in symbolic valley of Saint Florian which he called "Scandals in the Valley of St. Florian." In defense of his work he states that "I have painted the night with all of its darkness and gloom, full of sadness and misery that we may so much the more yearn after the light of day." To selfishness he waged a war such as Gorky waged in Russia. With painstaking detail he pictures the lives of the artists, poets, wanderers and especially women whom he pictures as mute slaves of love and duty, and as select consolers of husbands, symbolic country of dreams and hopes the country of Lepa Vida and the empire of the mythical Kralj Matjaz.

The works of the second epoch of Cankar's life show foreign influences. The war that he waged and those battles in which he engaged were the wars and battles of a host of other European writers such as Zola, Ibsen, Tolstoi, and especially Gorky. His style at this time sounds as a transition from the conversation of Ibsen as it was translated into the German although it becomes very light and airy with a note of freedom and ease which is quite different from the tone of the writers of Mesko. More and more did he become interested in Slovene being and language. His writings begin to show a development in the works: "Tujci," "Na klancu" (On the Hill) and "Križ na gori" (The Cross on the Mountain) and increase this development until he has published the satirical novels "Alez iz Razora" (1907) and "Hapec Jernej" in which he shows a delicate, refined and intense love for his home and for the homeland, for the village of his birth and for the surrounding countryside which he pictures with a wondrous observation and sympathy.

In his fights on the faults which he saw in the world, Cankar began to feel an intense interest and sympathy and mercy for the weak and mentally poor, but hopefull for the light and sunshine added to this there was an accompanying love for the poor and suffering, for the orphans and those subjugated. It was
