Although we are loath to praise ourselves, still for the enlightenment of those miserable people who still flounder in darkness we must tell that the Slovenes need do no more to have others talk about them; for they have already done enough to be held in the highest esteem by all other nationalities.

America has gained and will continue to gain as much from Slovenes as from any other nation. Although but about a quarter million Slovenes are scattered through the vast 120 million population of America, they have enough to show to the world that they need not be ashamed to compare their accomplishments with the largest nation of America. Slovenes in America have done so much that all other nationalities look up to them, praise them and consider them one of the most progressive groups of the country.

We have much to show and we can show it all the more proudly, for it was all accomplished by hard labors. Our fathers who built such a good reputation for the Slovenes came to this country penniless, and all that they did for America was done by the sweat of their brows. Still, they did enough to be remembered someone should claim that the Slovenes have done nothing!

In America, Slovenes have National Homes, Churches, Schools Banks, Beneficiary and Cultural organizations and outstanding men. Their singers have gained wide recognition, they have film stars whose names are flared in bright lights down picturesque Broadway. We have artists who are known far and wide for their works. "I must have information of Frohnberger's concoct ions. I must hesitate to attack the town unless I obtain facts concerning the size of Frohnberger's army and the conditions existing in the town. This is most important to our cause. Fetch me another spy; I must have one.' demanded the Sultan from those sitting around him.

"It is useless for you to send out, another Uskok. for the Venicani are suspicious of these people ever since the Uskoki betrayed the town of Kostel to us," explained a chieftain.

"Venica is too important a town for us to evade our grasp. It is one of the richest in all Slovenia, and we will be able to obtain so much gold as we never saw before. And my dear subjects have you not heard of the countless beautiful women that reside in that city? We need these women for our harems and we can easily get them if we can only capture the town. We do need an Uskoki spy, let one of you go. Which one of you will volunteer to go?", interrogated the Sultan.

"Is there no answer? Will no one volunteer? A promotion in the ranks and first choice of the women for the one who undertakes the task."

"I am capable of this work and if no one is comage ous enough to accept it, I will."

It was the haughty Schimbad who despite his low ranking still considered himself far above his superior in the matter of dignity.

"An enterprise like this does not frighten me.

Those Venicani cannot contend with the intellect of Schimbad. I will outwit them and bring back to you. Oh Sultan, the desired information," egotized the vain Schimbad.

Sighs of relieve filled the chamber.

The Sultan was delighted, because he had found one man who was willing to endanger his life on such a venture. The weak spirited Turks congratulated themselves since they were assured of safety now.

Disguised, Schimbad departed for Venica early the next morning. This treacherous Schimbad had mutilated himself; he had wounds on his head, hands and feet, which made him appear as though he had just had an encounter with the Turks. Saturated with blood, this gory sight begged for admission at the gates of Venica. The sentinals did not hesitate in the least in getting him in for they did not bother themselves with the thought whether he was disguised or not; it looked real.

Upon coming into the city Schimbad was dealt a big surprise. He had arrived just at a time when the first Uskoki spy was being quartered.

"Alas for the poor fellow meeting a fate so terrible after he had spent two months of untiring work in behalf of the Sultan. Allah forbid that I meet a like fate, thought Schimbad to himself as he gazed upon the limb wrecking scene.

Terrified, Schimbad lost much of his zeal to search for information. But, since he was being treated so kindly by the Venicani he thought that nothing could happen to him.
