To Our Young American Slovenes

By Ivan Zorman

With weary tread the evening dusk we face, You stir toward the sun with quickened pace -Behind us years of silent strife, Before you joyous, surging life, Behind us ashes of our vain pursuit, Before you future's ripe, resplendent fruit.

Alas, how little did we think of you, And now this age, so quickly come, so new! Regret our guilt can not forgive That of our spirit more we did not give. In toil and moil our powers we spent — And yet deep love to you we lent: For you, for you was spent the brawn That you might greet a brighter dawn.

When we depart, no riches will you find, We'll leave but National Homes behind: The hearths of brotherhood, of culture, art, The temples of Slovene good mind and heart. May they a treasured gift to you remain, May you their honor e'er proclaim! Our petty strifes, our waywardness forget, Our virtues seize, may they be with you yet, — The beauty of Slovene traditions, arts Spread o'er the New World's farthest parts, And fill with it relentless, hollow hearts! With loving hopes a fond farewell we say And bless you on your long and cheery way.
