JODEE THE JOKER

After leaving Burma, Topel Barney sailed the Lancel across the Bay of Bengal and anchored in the harbor of Colombo, the principal port of Ceylon, to take on more cargo. It was there that Kangy, Singoot, and I had another adventure with an elephant.

While we were walking around the streets of Colombo we spotted an elephant hitched to a two-wheeled cart. When the native driver asked us if we'd like to take a ride I said, "Aye-aye, mate." So we climbed into the cart and were off. By golly, by the time that ride was over I figured all elephants were natural jokers.

We'd no sooner cleared the town when we were alongside a native juggler with a monkey performin' on a pole. Our elephant yanked the pole from under the monkey and down came Mr. Monkey on top of the juggler's head. Then we rolled along and overtook a native carryin' chickens tied to a pole. The elephant grabbed the pole in his trunk and flipped chickens and pole up into the air, and actually grinned at the sight of his native chasin' after his chickens. Well s'r, it was a funny sight.

Next came the funniest joke of the day—but not for my pals and I. We'd stopped with the back of the cart close to the river, and the driver was whisperin' into the elephant's ear. Next thing we knew that dodgast elephant reared up on his hind-legs and out we went, head-over-heels into the river. When we came up for air that elephant, whose name by the way was Jodee, and his driver were makin' off and givin' us the he-ha. And we had to walk about five miles back to town. Jodee was some joker.
