Most of our fraternal organizations have been forward seeing enough to know that the interest of the youth is of paramount issue and that the future depends very much on how youth responds. Ay, there is the rub —will they respond? The answer is simple. If there is sufficient encouragement they will respond so their elders will have reason to be proud. In the fraternal organization the encouragement of the English speaking lodges has brought splendid results and more will come in the future. But sad to say English speaking lodges will not be the satisfactory answer in the near future something else will be necessary, something that will interest those children who are in their swaddling clothes today and who will be lost in the great melting not un-will be interested but whether one or the other is used ing the infidels. less something is done in the near future — aye, the very or some thing of which we do not even suspect be utilnear future.

Dr. France Preseren

By Ivan Zorman

There are probably very few Slovenes who have not heard or sung the tenderly beautiful serenade "Pod oknom" (Underneath the Window), which begins with the words "Luna sije, kladyo bije" (The moon shines, the clock strikes). There are many, however, who do not know that this perennial favorite was written by France Prešeren, our greatest poet. It is surely fitting to tell our younger Slovene generation from time to time something of this poetic genius. He is one of the brighest lights of Slovene culture and Slovene history. His poetic works gained for us an honorable position among the cultured peoples of Europe. The name Prešern has become a synonym for everything that is most noble and most characteristic of the Slovene heart and spirit. -Though these poems are Slovene to the core, they have a universal appeal, having been conceived by a spirit of wide range and deep love of humanity.

France Prešeren was born in the village of Vrba, near Lake Bled. This little village lies at the foot of the snow-capped mountains and is one of the most beautiful in Slovenia. The memory of Prešern's birthplace was ever dear to him, and he sings of it in some of his finest poems, particularly in his splendid sonnet "O Vrba, srečna, draga, vas domača" ("O Vrba, thou dear, happy native village).

In his seventh year Prešern was sent to his father's uncle, the priest Jože Prešeren, in Kopanje Dolenjsko. From 1810 to 1812 he attended the elementary school at Ribnica. In 1812 he came to Ljubljana to continue his education, six years of gymnasium and two years of philosophy, after which he left for Vienna to study law. He received the degree of Doctor of Laws in 1828. While in Vienna he was for a time instructor in the Klinkowstrom School, an institution which was attended by the sons of aristocratic families. There he met the young Count Anton Auersperg.

who later became the noted poet Anastasius Grun, upon whom Prešern exerted a great influence. The result of this relationship was Grund's book of translations "Volkslieder aus Krain" (Folk songs of Slovenia) published in 1850. In his Vienna years Prešern read much. He read various Greek, Latin and Italian writers. He became acquainted with the masters of antiquity, such as Homer, Euripedes, Sophocles, Plautus, Terrence, Ovid and the old - Italian writers Boccaccio and Guarini. When Prešern returned to Ljubljana he familiarized himself with the contemporary German, Italian, French and Spanish writers, thus gaining a thorough knowledge of the new Romantic School. It is interesting to note that Presern even read the works of Lord Byron and Thomas Moore.

In Ljubljana Prešern practiced law with the firm Baumgartner, and later with a friend of his Vienna school days, Crobath. He now again met Matija Čop, his dearest friend, who was born in Zerovnica (1797), a little village not far away from Vrba. Čop was a man of tremendous learning. Prešern called him "Velikan učenosti" (giant of learning). Čop had been professor of languages and humanities in Lvov and Reka (Fiume). He was well versed in most of the ancient as well as the modern languages, but not merely from a linguistic, philological viewpoint. He was more interested in the literary values of these languages. čop became Prešern's mentor, critic and guide, particularly in the field of esthetics and in the study of old and new metrical forms. The period beginning with the poet's return to Ljubljana till čop's untimely death in 1835 (he was accidentally drowned in the Sava River) was his most productive. This was the period of the "Kranjska Čbelica" (The Carniolian Bee)

"čbelica" a yearly almanac or magazine, was founded, edited and published by Miha Kastelic, Librarian at the Lyceum Library of Ljubljana. Kastelic succeeded in gathering all the contemporary poets, about this magazine. Prešeren being the most gifted, was, of course, its greatest contributor. Therein lies the chief importance of the "čbelica". It appeared five times in 1830 - 31 - 32 - 33 and in 1848. Thus was Prešern given an opportunity of bringing his poems to the attention of the Slovene public.

Prešern found his greatest inspiration in his love for Julia Primic. The poet's yearning for a strong, deep love was centered in her. Prešern's love for Julia however, was not merely erotic, it was not merely a lover's complaint of an unrequieted love, as it indeed proved to be in his case, but it was a love that closely linked itself with the poet's love for humanity and especially for the Slovene land and its people. His marvellous sonnet sequence "Sonetni venec" (Sonnet Wreath) reveals to us a grandiouse weaving and fusion of his love for Julia with his love for his country and his people. Julia was his inspiration from 1831 till the publication of his noble epic "Krst pri Savici" (The Baptism at the Savica) in 1836 and even beyond that date.

"Krst pri Savici" was composed in the days of Prešeren's greatest dejection, at a time when he realized that Julia was lost to him; it was written soon after the death of his friend čop. Thus is "Krst pri Savici" a monument to Prešeren's dead love, with the principal thought: Man in this world cannot be happy; happiness is not the goal of this life; the quest for the happiness is not its intent. Perhaps man has no right to happiness but it is necessary that the yearning for happiness (hrepenenje po sreči) be transformed into a yearning for realization (hrepenenje po spoznanju).

There was a lull in Prešern's creative work after his "Krst." But a new enthusiasm and inspiration was awakened in him by his two remaining friends, the young Polish poet Emil Korytko and the merchant Andrej Smole.

Korytko came to Ljubljana in 1837 as a political exile. He and Prešern became fast friends. Prešern taught Korytko Slovene, and Korytko taught Prešern Polish. Korytko was greatly interested in the Slovene folk songs, many of which he translated into the Polish. Korytko planned to publish two volumes dealing with the Slovene folk song, fairy tales and proverbs. Korytko died in 1839 and did not, himself, publish this gathered material. It was, however, published later by Blaznik.

Smole, with Prešern's aid began the publication of various Slovene works. In 1840 Valentin Vodnik's "Pesmi" (Poems) and shortly afterward's the plays of Linhart, as well as his own translation of Garrick's "The Guardian" (Varh).
