AMERICA'S GRAND CANYON

Frank E. Cecelic

PART II.

The Grand Canyon is the world's most spectacular illustration of erosion—of the combined action of a great river, of rain, wind and the prying fingers of frost, in sculpturing the surface of the earth. The results of erosion are familiar to all of us. The roadside gully and this greatest of all chasms are in principle "identical."

One of the attractive features of a visit there is the chance to become an amateur geologist under the most favorable conditions, for scientists claim that the earth's own story is more completely revealed in the walls of the Grand Canyon than in any other one area in the world.

As you stand in awe on the brink of the great chasm, or find your way down the inner trails, it is interesting to reflect the work of making the canyon is not yet finished. The tireless forces that have molded the abyss—the rushing torrent below and the small streams that descend to join it, the intermittent rain and snow and frost—all are still at work on this credible earth-carving.

The Colorado River has been wearing away the walls. In the recess of the inner gorge, it is still cutting its way downward—perhaps at the rate of a tiny fraction of an inch each year. And since the river at the foot of Bright Angel Trail is still nearly 2,500 feet above sea-level, the deepening and widening of the gorge seems destined to be in process for millions of years to come.

Here too, you can enjoy an outing at any season. The high altitude (7,000 feet) and southern latitude of the South Rim insure cool weather in summer and a preponderance of warm days in winter. The mountain air is invigorating, the nights are crisp and most days there is an abundance of Arizona sun shine. Each season has its own special attraction and charm. You can go any time you like.

First of all the Canyon should be seen from the innumerable observation points jutting out from the South Rim. These points, presenting view after view of the chasm's varied panorama, are easily reached by following the excellent roads,

EUCLID S.D.Z. LODGE NO. 6 PRESENTS CARNIVAL DANCE

Tomorrow night Lodge No. 6 SDZ will hold their Carnival Dance at the Slovene Society Home, Recher Ave.

This affair is the first since the war. During the war many of our members were in the armed forces making it useless for us to plan anything. Now that our members have returned we want to make our Carnival Dance a truly gala evening.

To satisfy your curiosity and dancing feet, we will have the ever popular Polkateers ready to render their polkas and waltzes.

During the course of the evening valuable prizes will be given away. First prize will be a pressure cooker, second prize an electric roaster and third prize an electric clock.

All our veterans are urged to attend and bring with them the letters they received entitling them to a beautiful gift remembrance from this, their lodge.

So, get on your duds and come early and stay late tomorrow night when the Euclid Slovenes show a wonderful evening of dancing, fun and who knows, you might take home a valuable prize!
